MCH91-31-1-9 Upter by profts for the NEC-A.S. - May 1947 nand nonper affear to have felt from memory, before looking about the Constitutional Principles E beteggere C. Apero out 3 To altumin to inectings prototype consts is leagues Pour (ii) Liberal - Democrate (iii) (Juli - Fascist (post - dictorship) D. Some Maponals The NEC ofted PANC Gon. Gon. to NWC critique. - for the last VI La sub-committee of the NEC on these Ether arteget and J. I. I bus He would know more from the inside These are important docs. - the meanest anyone produced on the general conceptual epic. Refore Lan 1987 I visited Micaragua I chick in late 1986 or earlier to study they constitutional process, and ncidentally, discovered autonomia for ethic minorities; and the idea

ANTI - FASCIST CONSTITUTIONS.

Anti - fascist constitutions is a term we use to group together constitutions that cannot be easily classified wither with liberal democratic or with people's power type constitu tions. They are realtively modern phonemonon , being associated with the overthrow of fascism in the Second World War and the destruction of fascist - type dictatorship since. Thus they would include the Constitutions of Italy and Apan and the constitutional documents of Eastern Europe, immediately after the war, the Constitution of Portugal more recently and the Constitutional proposals presently being debated in Nicaragua.

Anti - fascist constitutions vary considerably in form and content one from the other, depending on the concrete historical conditions in which they were initially adopted. But they all tend to have certain things in common.f

They are drawn up by the victor after the overthrow of fascien , representing such common ground as exists in the broad anti - fascist alliance at the time. They are like liberal democratic constitutions in that they presuppose piclitical pluralism (as opposed to fascist hegemony) and a mixed economy. They are unlike 'pure' liberal democratic constitutions in that, firstly, they expressly contain measures to prevent any revival of fasciem or propagation of fascist values, secondly they expressly contain social programmes that presuppose economic and cultural renewal and thridly , they ensure that the implementation of the Constitution is not left to the representative of the overthrown distatorship. They fall short of being people's ijower type constitutions, however , in that they do not give a leading role in explicit constitutional terms to an social class or allinace of classes, nor do they attribute to any party or alliance of parties a defined vanguard position. From a constitutional point of view the nature of the state is left open.

These points are made clearer by an analysis of the Constitution adopted in Portugal after the overthrow of take dictatorship on 25 April 1974 and of the constitutional process at p present under way in Nicaragua. (see annexure)

Applying these principles to the South African situation , we can draw the following conclusions :

Firstly, anti fascist constitutions are made after and not before the overthrow of fascier We are not every of any fascist regime that has negotiated an anti - facist constitution, The broad anti - fascist front may, however, magree on certain constitutional principles is issufure before the overthrow, which are publihed with aview to consolidating the anti - fasci--st allinace and guaranteeing to the people the right to pronounce on the kind of society they want after the overthrow of fascism. In our case, the Freedom Charter already exists, as a basic programmatic statement. Consideration could be given to converting its essential essentials elements into simple constitutional phrases that make immedaite impact and summarise our basic positions , (e.g. Unitary state; Democracy ; Non - Racism ; Anti - Apartheid ; Equal Rights ; Political Pluralism ; Mixed Economy ; Redistribution of Wealth ; Transformation of the Civil Service , Police and Army ; Non - Alignment ). Alternatively, or in addition we could , acting together with all patriotic forces, produce a series of s statements outlining our positions in relation to certain fundamental constitutional themes These could follow the form of a series of Charters, for example :

> Charter of Political Rights. Charter of Economic Rights . Workers Charter. Education Charter.

1 ....

Charter on Religious Freedom.

Such Charters would all have a democratic , anti - apartheid character, and could , taken together be incorporated as the core of a Bill of Rights in a future constituion.

Secondly, when the anti - fascist Constituion finally comes to be drawn , it must , in addition to establishing the unitary , non - racial and democratic nature of the new state be clear on three points :

- 1) No freedom to organise for the continuation or restoration of apartheid in any shape or form ;
- 2) Total reconstruction of the civil service, army and police force on democratic lines ;
- 3) Re Distribution of Wealth (including the Land) as a Constitutional principle.

The Constitution will not be 'neutral' or open on these questions.

WE should montion that the Constitutional Outline which we drafted in fact does pay attenttion to these themes but in a rather subdued way.

In the light of the comments subsequently, it is clear that they should have been spelt out more forcefully.

Finally, while it appears to be premature at this stage to be taking decisions on questions like voting systems and forms of government, it is equally clear that we need to do much basic research so as to be well prepared in these areas. We need to understand the stat technical issues and also the political questions that lurk behind them, do as not one day to lose political advantage through seemingly technical questions.

These are themes that occupy an important place in anti - Fascist constitutions and we should seek to be in a ijosition where we can take initiatives rather than merely respond to the initiatives of others.

ANTI - FASCIST CONSTITUTIONS.

Anti - fascist constitutions is a term we use to group together constitutions that cannot be easily classified wither with liberal democratic or with people's power type constitu tions. They are realtively modern phonemonon , being associated with the overthrow of fascism in the Second World War and the destruction of fascist - type dictatorship since. Thus they would include the Constitutions of Italy and Japan and the constitutional documents of Eastern Europe, immediately after the war, the Constitution of Portugal more recently and the Constitutional proposals presently being debated in Nicaragua.

Anti - fascist constitutions vary considerably in form and content one from the other, depending on the concrete historical conditions in which they were initially adopted. But they all tend to have certain things in common.f

They are drawn up by the victor after the overthrow of fascism , representing such common ground as exists in the broad anti - fascist alliance at the time. They are like liberal democratic constitutions in that they presuppose pholitical pluralism (as opposed to fascist hagemony) and a mixed economy. They are unlike 'pure' liberal democratic constitutions in that, firstly, they expressly contain measures to prevent any revival of fascism or propagation of fascist values, secondly they expressly contain social programmes that presuppose economic and cultural renewal and thridly , they ensure that the implementation of the Constitution is not left to the representative of the overthrown dictatorship. They fall short of being people's jower type constitutions, however , in that they do not give a leading role in explicit constitutional terms to an social class or allinace of classes, nor do they attribute to any party or alliance of parties a defined vanguard position. From a constitutional point of view the nature of the state is left open.

These points are made clearer by an analysis of the Constitution adopted in Portugal after the overthrow of take dictatorship on 25 April 1974 and of the constitutional process at p present under way in Nicaragua. (see annexure)

Applying these principles to the South African situation , we can draw the following conclusions :

Firstly, anti fascist constitutions are made after and not before the overthrow of fascis We are not aware of any fascist regime that has negotiated an anti - facist constitution. The broad anti - fascist front may, however, magree on certain constitutional principles b MERATES before the overthrow, which are publihed with aview to consolidating the anti - fasci -st allinace and guaranteeing to the people the right to pronounce on the kind of society they want after the overthrow of fascism. In our case, the Freedom Charter already exists, as a basic programmatic statement. Consideration could be given to converting its essential essential elements into simple constitutional phrases that make immedaite impact and summarise our basic positions , (e.g. Unitary state; Democracy ; Non - Racism ; Anti - Apartheid ; Equal Rights ; Political Pluralism ; Mixed Economy ; Redistribution of Wealth ; Transformation of the Civil Service , Police and Army ; Non - Alignment ). Alternatively, or in addition we could , acting together with all patriotic forces, produce a series of s statements outlining our positions in relation to certain fundamental constitutional themes. These could follow the form of a series of Charters, for example :

> Charter of Political Rights. Charter of Economic Rights . Workers Charter. Education Charter. Charter on Religious Freedom.

Such Charters would all have a democratic , anti - apartheid character, and could , taken together be incorporated as the core of a Bill of Rights in a future constituion.

Secondly, when the anti - fascist Constituion finally comes to be drawn , it must , in addition to establishing the unitary , non - racial and democratic nature of the new state be clear on three points :

- 1) No freedom to organise for the continuation or restoration of apartheid in any shape or form ;
- 2) Total reconstruction of the civil service, army and police force on democratic lines ;

3) Re - Distribution of Wealth (including the Land) as a Constitutional principle. The Constitution will not be 'neutral' or open on these questions.

WE should mention that the Constitutional Outline which we drafted in fact does pay attenttion to these themes but in a rather subdued way.

In the light of the comments subsequently, it is clear that they should have been spelt out more forcefully.

Finally, while it appears to be premature at this stage to be taking decisions on questions like voting systems and forms of government, it is equally clear that we need to do much basic research so as to be well prepared in these areas. We need to understand the technical issues and also the political questions that lurk behind them, so as not one day to lose political advantage through seemingly technical questions.

These are themes that occupy an important place in anti - Fascist constitutions and we should seek to be in a ijosition where we can take initiatives rather than merely respond to the initiatives of others.

Anti-Fascist Constitutions. O. 1+2 Anti-fascist constitutions is a term we use to define constitutions that cannot be easily classified either with liberal democratic or with people's paves type constitutions. They are a relatively modern phonemonon, being associated with the overthrow of fascism in the Second World War and the destruction of fasiist type dictasterships since. Thus they would the institutional documents of taly and Japan and the institutional documents of immediately after the war, that the boustitution of Portugal more recently and the Constitutional proposals for Hicardgera. Each such constitution to a product of articula with the thirt of the thirth of the particula many whether the thirth the thirth of the particula that hought it to birth Anti-fascist constitution vary considerably in form and content one from the other, depending

2. (they were adopted. on the concrete historical anditions in which is each to be all tend to have restain theirs in common the victor after the they are drawn up to the victor after the serther of fascism, representing such common ground as the attendent of forements edist in the those the attendent forements edist in the those the tiberal democratic constitutions, the time, in that presuppose political pluralism (#2 Afford to fasiest hegemony) and a mided learning. They are unlike 'pure' -tiperal democratic constitutions in that, firstly, they expressly contain measures to prevent my revival of fascism or propagation of fasiest values, and, secondly, they tostain beint a togramants ( expressly contain zocial programmes that preappales leanswei and cultural renewal that the prove that the implementation of the forstitution is not leve to refine entatives of the the implementation of the forstitution is not leve to refine entatives dictationly they fall short of herry people's parter type Constitutions, havever, in that they do not give a leading role in explecit constitutional terms to any social class or deliances of classes, nor do they attribute to any party or alleance of defined to arguerd position From a constitutional parties a vanguard position from a constitutional point, of view, the nature of the state is left open. analysis of the Constitution adopted in Portugal after the overetion of the dictatorship on 25 april 1974 and of the constitutional process at present under way in Nicardgua. L'Lee annesures ]. Applying these principles to the South aprican situation, we can draw the following conclusions: Firstly, anti-fascist constitutions are made after and not before the overthoor of foscism. Attendent the froad anti-fasiest front may, havever, agree n restain constitutional principles before the werthrow, which are published with a We are not aware of any fasiist regime that has regotiated an anti- fasied view to consolidating the anti-fascist alliance and giving the people the right to provisince on the kind of society they want after the verticar of fascism. In our case, the Freedom Charter already easts as a basic statement, Consideration could be given to converting its essential elements into simple constitutional begand that phrases that make immediate impact and summarise der basic positions, or Montainthin the Collector, Leg. Unitary state; Democracy; Non-Rausin; & Equal Rights; Elutatism () Sufficient deartheid, Political Pluralism; Mixed Economy; Redistribution of Wealth; Iransformation the Givil Lervice, Police and Any; I han attendively or in addition, acting together with all patricitic forces, we could, appodence a serves of statements retlening sir positions in relation to eddmple : Att Chartes of Political Rights Charter of Economic Rights Worker Charter Luch blarten would all have a democratic, anti-yartheid character, and could, taken together, be incorporated as the cove Ja Bill of Rights in a future constitution. Secondly, when the anti-faseist Constitution finally zones to be drawn, it must, in addition to establishing the unitary, non-racial and democratic nature of the new state be clear on three points: 1). No freedan to organize for the continuation or restoration of apartheid in any shape or form; 21. Re- Distribution of Wealth ( including the Land) as a Constitutional principle; 3). Lotal reconstruction of the civil service, any and police force on democratic linez. The Constitution will not be 'neutral' or open a these questions. We shall mention that I thirdly, the Constitutional Authine which we drafted in fact pays attention to these themes but in a rather subdued way. attack supporting these we interpreted our preprieting to be that we should try Clerkops to balance but the Clothere In the tight of the comments subsequently made, it is clear that they should have been spelt out more forcefully. Finally, while it the affear to be premature at this stage to be taking décisions on questions like voting systems and forms of government, it is equally clear that we need to so as to be well prepared to much basic research in these areas. We need to understand the technical issues and also the political questions that lierk behind them, so a not be one day to be political advantages through seeningly technical questions. These through seeningly there technical questions. These through numprise. These in anti-Fascist constitutions and we should seek to be in a position where we can take mitiatives rather than merely respond to the initiatives of other.

PEOPLE'S POWER CONSTITUTIONS

The basic difference between liberal democratic and people's power constitutions is that the former purports to be neutral on the question of who exercise powere in the state, whereas the latter take a declared constitutional position - based on class analysis on the question. Put another way, liberal democratic constitutions presuposses that power vests in the institution of government themselves and that the essential function of the constitution is to establish the 'rules of the game' as to who hilds the reins, people's power constitutions, on the other hand, confirm that power in any state belongs to classes or class alliances, which use the institutions of government as means of exercisir such power.

A number of consequences flow from this disctinction :

First, liberal democratic constitutions are silent on the nature of power in the state , while people's power constitution expressly ligitimate a defined form of class hegemony or domination.

Secondly, liberal democratic constitutions do not kawa accors any overt recognizion of political parties, while people's power constitutions expressly recognize a leading or vanguard role in relation to society as a whole and to the Syste apparatus in particular of an identified party or alliance of parties.

(It should be noted that the issue is not simply whether the State is One Party or Multi -Party , nor whether the Constitutuion institutionalise a party or not. One - Party states may be fascist, liberal capitalist or socialist. Multi - Party states as well as many conservative African States institutionalise a single party.

Thirdly, liberal democratic constitutions tend to regard the State as a necessary evil thathas to be controlled through separation of powers and a Bill of Rights, while people's power constitutations regard the State as the major instrument whereby the people achieve their rights to progress and development. Thus, people's power constitutions emphasises f the harmony of objectives of the three basic institutions. of the constitution, namely , the legislature , the executive and the judiciary, while outlining the separate functions. Similarly, people's power constitutions, while affirming individual rights of citizens, refer also to citizens' duties or responsibilites, and indicate that these rights and duties are exercised in a context which does not permit a restoration of the overthrown power.

Fourthly, liberal democratic constitutions leave open the question of social and economic programmes , or only deal with them indirectly, for example , by consecrating the rights of private property in a Bill of Rights, while people's power constitutions expressly impose on the State & duty to fulfil a defined socio - economic - cultural programme. ONe consequen -ce of this is that new Constitutions emerge in a liberal democratic state as a result of the failure of institutions, (France at the time of De Gaulle) while in a people's power state they result from their success.- the realisation of one constitutional programme requires the formulation of another.

Fifthly, liberal democratic constitutions imply that the army and other instruments of power are neutral, responding to the command only of the elected government, while people' power constitutions recognise the existence of a politicised armed forces to defend the gar gains of the people's struggle.

Finally, Constitutions are normally complemented by separate electoral laws, which differ considerably depending on whether the state is liberal democratic or people's power in character. While the principle of universal suffrage and secret ballot is common to both types, where are major distingtions in relation to the way candidates are selected. In addition people's power constitutions sometimes deprive persons directly implicated in crimes or policies of the overthrown regime of the right to elect or to be elected.

These are the main differences. There are a number of other constitutional variants that cannot be correlated iwth the existence of liberal democracy or people's power. Thus, either system might be unitary or federal (the LEA and the LESR both call themselves Union: but in fact from a constitutional point of view both are federatuons). Equally, either type may be presidential or prime ministerial. (Maurice Bishop was the first Prime Minister of Grenada, the first former British colony to follow the road of people's power).

What could the implications of a people's power constitution be for South Africa ? It would declare that kks South Africa is a state of national democracy in which the former -ly oppressed masses, uniting around themselves all patriotic forces, exercise power. It would institutionalise the revoltuinionary alliance headedby the ANC as the vanguard force in society and government.

It would impose on the state a duty to carry out a programme of social, economic and cultural transformation.

It would institutionalise changes in the judiciary, armed forces, security apparatus and civil service, putting them at the service of people's power.

It would outlaw activites designed to defeat the programme of transformation or to mestore or perpetuate apartheid.

The electoral law would give the alliance headed by the ANC, working together with democratic mass organisations, a leading role in the selection of candidates.

In short, people's power establishes itself first, yhen proceeds to institutionalise itself the processinstitutionalisation, including the adoption of a Constitution, cannot be predi--ted in advance. What can be done in advance is to publish a general political programme which defined the basic goals of the post - liberation society. A geople's power constituti published in the absence of people's power is virtually a contradiction in terms.

PEOPLE'S POWER CONSTITUTIONS

The basic difference between liberal democratic and people's power constitutions is that the former purports to be neutral on the question of who exercise powers in the state, whereas the latter take a declared constitutional position - based on class analysis on the question. Put another way, liberal democratic constitutions presuposes that power vests in the institution of government themselves and that the essential function of the constitution is to establish the 'rules of the game' as to who holds the reins, people's power constitutions, on the other hand, confirm that power in any state belongs to class es or class alliances, which use the institutions of government as means of exercisin such power.

A number of consequences flow from this disctinction :

First, liberal democratic constitutions are silent on the nature of power in the state , while people's power constitution expressly ligitimate a defined form of class begenony or domination.

Secondly, liberal democratic constitutions do not waxe accord any overt recognizion of  $t_{\mathcal{O}}$  political parties, while people's power constitutions expressly recognise a leading or vanguard role in relation to society as a whole and to the Syste apparatus in particular of an identified party or alliance of parties.

(It should be noted that the issue is not simply whether the State is One Party or Multi -Party , nor whether the Constitutuion institutionalise a party or not. One - Party states may be fascist, liberal capitalist or socialist. Multi - Party states as well de Many conservative African States institutionalise a single party.

Thirdly, liberal democratic constitutions tend to regard the State as a necessary evil thathas to be controlled through separation of powers and a Bill of Rights, while people's power constitutations regard the State as the major instrument whereby the people achieve their rights to progress and development. Thus, people's power constitutions emphasises the harmony of objectives of the three basic institutions of the constitution, namely , the legislature , the executive and the judiciary, while outlining whe separate functions. Similarly, people's power constitutions, while affirming individual rights of citizens, refer also to citizens' duties or responsibilites, and indicate that these rights and duties are exercised in a context which does not permit a restoration of the overthrown power.

Fourthly, liberal democratic constitutions leave open the question of social and economic programmes , or only deal with them indirectly, for example , by consecrating the rights of private property in a Bill of Rights, while people's power constitutions expressly impose on the State & duty to fulfil a defined socio - economic - cultural programme. ONe conseque .ce of this is that new Constitutions emerge in a liberal democratic state as a result of the failure of institutions/ (France at the time of De Gaulle), while in a people's power state they result from their success.- the realisation of one constitutional programme requires the formulation of another.

Fifthly, liberal democratic constitutions imply that the army and other instruments of power are neutral, responding to the command only of the elected government, while people's power constitutions recognize the existence of a politicised armed forces to defend the gar gains of the people's struggle.

Finally, Constitutions are normally complemented by separate electoral laws, which differ considerably depending on whether the state is liberal democratic or people's power in character. While the principle of universal suffrage and secret ballot is common to both types, where are major distingtions in relation to the way candidates are selected. In addition people's power constitutions sometimes deprive persons directly implicated in the crimes or policies of the overthrown regime of the right to elect or to be elected.

These are the main differences. There are a number of other constitutional variants that cannot be correlated inth the existence of Tiberal democracy or people's power. Thus, either system might be unitary or federal (the USA and the USSR both call themselves Unions, but in fact from a constitutional point of view both are federatuons). Equally, either type may be presidential or prime ministerial. (Maurice Bishop was the first Prime Minister of Grenada, the first former British colony to follow the road of people's power).

What could the implications of a people's power constitution be for South Africa ? It would declare that May South Africa is a state of national democracy in which the former--ly oppressed masses, uniting around themselves all patriotic forces, exercise power. It would institutionalise the revoltuinionary alliance headedby the ANC as the vanguard force in society and government.

It would impose on the state a duty to carry out a programme of social, economic and cultural transformation.

It would institutionalise changes in the judiciary, armed forces , security apparatus and civil service, putting them at the service of people's power.

It would outlaw activities designed to defeat the programme of transformation or to zestore or perpetuate apartheid.

The electoral law would give the alliance headed by the ANC , working together with democratic mass organisations, a leading role in the selection of candidates.

In short, people's power establishes itself first, then proceeds to institutionalise itself, the processinstitutionalisation, including the adoption of a Constitution, cannot be predic -ted in advance. What can be done in advance is to publish a general political programme which defined the basic goals of the post - liberation society. A geople's power constitution published in the absence of people's power is virtually a contradiction in terms. People's Part Constitutions

(). 1+2

The basic difference between liberal democratic and people's paver constitutions is that the former purporte to be neutral on the question of who exercises power in the state, whereas the latter takes a declared constitutional position - based on class analysis - on the question, the Abertation ok state way liberal democratic constitutions presuppose that power vests in the institution. I government themselves and that the function of the constitution is to establish the rules of the game 'therety the holdes of power constitutions, on the other hand, affirm that power in any State belongs to classes or class alleances, and that which use the institutions of government as means of exercising such power. A number of consequences flow from this distinction: First, liberal democratic constitutions are selent on the nature of power in the state, while people's power constitutions expressly legitimate a defined form of class hegemony or domination. Secondly, liberal democratic roustitutions to not decord any overt recognition of political parties, while reople's paver constitutions expressly recognise a leading or vanguard role in relation to society as a whole and to the State apparatus in particular of an identified party or allience of parties. Thirdly, Albertedena Ett should be noted that the issue is not simply whether the State is One Party or Multi-Party, nor whether the Constitution institutionalises a party or not. Che-larty states may be foscist, the liberal rapitalist or socialist. Multi-party states as well. Many conservative african States institutionalise a single party ]. Thirdly, liberal democratic constitution tend to regard the State as a necessary evil that has to be controlled through separation of powers and a Bill of Rights, while people's power constitution, regard the State os the major instrument whereby the people achieve their right to progress and development. Thus, people's power constitutions emphasise the harmony of objectives of the three basic institutions of the constitution, namely, the legislature, the executive and the judiciary, while rutlining their separate functions. Similarly, people's power constitutions, while affirming individual rights of citizens, refer also to utijens' duties or reponsibilities, and indicate that these rights and duties are exercised in the a context which does not vernit a restoration of the verthoan power. Faurthly, liberal democratic constitutions leave open the question of social and econonice programmes, or only deal with them indirectly, for example, by consecrating the rights of private property in a Bell of Rights, while people's power constitutions expressly impose on the State a duty to fulfil a defined 2010 - leanonie - cultural programme. One consequence of this is that new Constitutions & emerge in a liberal democratic state is a result of the failure of institutions, . (France at the time of de Gaulle) while in a people's paver state they result from their seccess - the realisation of me constitutional programme requires the formulation of another. Hiftely, Fifchly, liberal democratic constitutions imply that the army and other instruments of paver are neutral, responding to the rormand only of the elected government, while people's power constitutions recognise the existence of politicised amed forces to defend the gains of the two striggle.

Finally, Constitutions are normally complemented by theitetate separate electoral legendation which differe the state is unsiderably the theory of whether the state is residerably the theory while the principle I univeral and selftrage and secret ballot is common to both, there are major way candidates are selected. distinctions in relation to the selection mallition people's power in the soundines constitutions & deprive persons directly implicated in crimes of the overthrown regime of the right to elect or be elected. Exchalt be heted. These are the main differences, There are a number of other constitutional variants that rannot be romelated with the existence of liberal democraty or people's power. Thus, either Apathetister system night be unitary or federal ( the USA and the USSR both called themselves Unions, but in fact from a constitutional point of view, both are federations). Equally, either may be presidential or prime ministerial Maurice Bishop was the Prime Minister of Grenada the first former Brotish rolony to the road of paver). What would the implications of a plople's power constitution be for South apreca? It would declare that South Africa is a state of national democracy in which the formerly offressed masses, uniting around themselves all patriotic forces, excercise power. Le would institution the revolutionary alliance headed by the ANC as the varguard force in the society and government. It would that out a programme of social, learnice and rultural transformation. It would institutionalise changes in the judiciary, amed forces, security apparatus and rivil service, putting them at the service of people's power. It would outlaw activities designed to defeat the programme of transformation or to restore rapartheid. The electoral law would give the working together with alliance beaded by the ANC, and democratic mass organisations, a leading role in The selection of randidates. In short, people's power established itself first, then proceeds to institutionalise itself. The process of (9). institutionalisation, meluding the adoption of a Constitution, rannot be predicted in advance. What can be done in advance is to publish a general political programme which defines the basic goals of the port-liberation society. A people's power constitution published in the absence of people's power is vertually a contradiction in terms.

ANTI - FASCIST CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN NICARAGUA.

Before spearheading the overthrow of the Somoza regime in 1979, the Sandinistas did not publish a Constitution. Infact, to Whis day, Nicaragua does not have a post - liberation Constitution, though discusiion of a new Constitution has reached an advance stage.

The basic steps in constitutional development were as follows :

Some months after the triumph of the National Liberation struggle, the Junta of the Government of National Recconstruction published a document entitled 'Fundamental Statute and Statute on Rights and Guarantees of Nicaraguans'. The Fundamental Statute gave legal form to two major instruments of government established at this time, namely, a five - person Junta with powers to promulgate laws, a 33 person Council of State with certain veto powers. The document determined the precise composition of the Council of State, in which incidentally the Sandinistas only had 6 members were to be elected by their various of the Council of Private Enterprise. The members were to be elected by their various organisations, but thereafter have a free vote. A new judicial system was established , Somoza National Guard and associated security organisations were dissolved and a new patriotic national army created on the basis of the Sandinistas combatants, honests and patriotic members of the National Guard , others who had fought for liberation and wished to join the army, and those who were to do national service.

The next step was the elaboration of an Electoral Law, a task which fell to the Council of State, acting in consultation with the countrries political parties and stimulaating a national debate. The Council and a mixed team to visit different countries in Western Europe and Latin America in order to 'incorporate into Nicaraguan law, elements of universal tradition applicable to the reality of the country'. The Law was adopted in 1983 and electio for a President , Vice - President and 90 member National Assembely were held in November, 1984,

Finally, the National Assembly has the function of producing a Draft Constitution, which is expected to be adopted in January 1987, two years after the present government took offic The above summary indicates the step by step nature of Constitutional development in the post - liberation society. What the documents themselves reveal is that the Sandinistas have managed to fulfil their guarantee of political pluralism, mixed economy and non - alignment, while at the same time maintaining their leading role in government, engaging in extensive reforms and beating off counter - revo.ution. The documents available are mainly in Spanish and contain many interesting sections, ranging from freedom of speech to land reform to the rights of national minorities - it would be advisable to attempt to find translations, summaries or commentaries in English. Although the Nicaraguan experience is not directly relevant to the South African experience , it shares a similar context , Fidel Castro pointed out :

"The front of struggle for social change has to be a broad one, including Christians, Trotskyites , workers , the middle class and also the military, don't forget them , or do we want to hand them over to the CIA ? The front cannot be extremist. We have to find formu--las like the Nicaraguan one or others. The Nicaraguan approach is well adjusted to curren international circumstances. It is realistic. With regard to the way it took power, the Nicaraguan revolution is very similar to the Cuban one. But if the Nicaraguan revolution has radicalised itself and proclaimed socialism , I don't think this would have helped the revolutionary movement of Central America or South America.

"The Nicaraguans have made an important contribuiis: to the struggle of other peoples, since, if it had become radicalised, it would have isolated irself, frightened people, given arguments to imperialism and facilitated the work of Reagan". Cadernos do Terceiro Mundo, August 1985.

It should be noted that in the concrete circumstances of the engoing procress of exercising State Power, negotiations by the Sandinistas with other political parties (at least six, ranging from ultra - left to conservative) is part of the pluralism they guaranteed. But it never involved negotiations with Somoza , nor does it involve negotiations with the contras today. The two guarantees against pluralism leading to counter - revolution are popular mobilisation and the fact that the Sandinistas control the armed forces ; the external guarantee is the support of progressive international forces.

ANTI - FASCIST CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN NICARAGUA.

Before spearheading the overthrow of the Somoza regime in 1979, the Sandinistas did not publish a Constitution. Infact, to Whis day, Nicaragua does not have a post - liberation Constitution, though discussion of a new Constitution has reached an advance stage.

The basic steps in constitutional development were as follows :

Some months after the triumph of the National Liberation struggle, the Junta of the Government of National Recconstruction published a document entitled 'Fundamental Statute and Statute on Rights and Guarantees of Nicaraguans'. The Fundamental Statute gave legal form to two major instruments of government established at this time, namely, a five - persor Junta with powers to promulgate laws, a 33 person Council of State with certain veto powers. The documesnt determined the precise composition of the Council of State, in which incidentally the Sandinistas only had 6 membersas opposed to 7 for the difference units of the Council of Private Enterprise. The members were to be eleted by their various organisations, but thereafter have a free vote. A new judicial system was established , Somoza National Guard and associated security organisations were dissolved and a new patriotic members of the National Guard , others who had fought for liberation and wished to join the army, and those who were to do national service.

The next step was the elaboration of an Electoral Law, a task which fell to the Council of State, acting in consultation with the countrries political parties and stimulmating a national debate. The Council sent a mixed team to visit different countries in Western Europe and Latin America in order to 'incorporate into Nicaraguan law, elements of universal tradition applicable to the reality of the country'. The Law was adopted in 1983 and election for a President , Vice - President and 90 member National Assembely were held in November, 1984.

Finally, the National Assembly has the function of producing a Draft Constitution, which is expected to be adopted in January 1987, two years after the present government took office The above summary indicates the step by step nature of Constitutional development in the post - liberation society. What the documents themselves reveal is that the Samdinistas have managed to fulfil their guarantee of political pluralism, mixed economy and non - alignment, while at the same time maintaining their leading role in government, engaging in extensive reforms and beating off counter - revolution. The documents available are mainly in Spanisg and contain many interesting sections, ranging from freedon of speech to land reform to the rights of national minorities - it would be advisable to attempt to find translations, summaries or commentaries in English. Although the Nicaraguan experience is not directly relevant to the South African experience , it shares a similar context , Fidel Castro pointed out :

"The front of struggle for social change has to be a broad one, including Christians, Trotskyites , workers , the middle class and also the military, don't forget them , or do we want to hand them over to the CIA ? The front cannot be extremist. We have to find formu -las like the Nicaraguan one or others. The Nicaraguan approach is well adjusted to curren international circumstances. It is realistic. With regard to the way it took power, the Nicaraguan revolution is very similar to the Cuban one. But if the Nicaraguan revolution has radicalised itself and proclaimed socialism , I don't think this would have helped the revolutionary movement of Central America or South America.

"The Nicaraguans have made an important contributions to the struggle of other peoples, since, if it had become radicalised, it would have isolated irself, frightened people, given arguments to imperialism and facilitated the work of Reagan". Cadernos do Terceiro Mundo, August 1985.

It should be noted that in the concrete circumstances of the ongoing procress of exercising State Power, negotiations by the Sandinistas with other political parties (at least six, ranging from ultra - left to conservative) is part of the pluralism they guaranteed. But it never involved negotiations with Somoza , nor does it involve negotiations with the contras today. The two guarantees against pluralism leading to counter - revolution are popular mobilisation and the fact that the Sandinistas control the armed forces ; the external guarantee is the support of progressive international forces.

-- 2 ---

Anti-Fascist Constitutional Development in Nicaragua.

The anti- Lonioza popula insurrection led by the Landjnistap finally begreeded in destroying Sangest parter in 1979.

Before spearheading the worthrow of the Samoja regime in 1979, the Landinistas tid not publish a Constitution. In fact, to this day Micangua does not have a pert revolutionary Constitution, though discussion of a new Constitution has reached an advanced stage. The basic steps in constitutional development were as follows: Some months, Junedeately after the triumph of the Mational Liberation struggle, Junta of the Government verolution, the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction published a document entitled 'Fundamental Statute and Statute on Rights and Guarantees of Nicorgguans." The Fundamental Statute gave legal form to two major instruments I government established at the time, namely, a five-peron funta with power to pronulgate laux, and a 33-person baincil of State with restain veto rower. The state with restain veto rower. The fightight of that document poweded that the Concel of the treamposition of the bouncil of State, in which the Landinistas only hada 6 members & as opposed to 7 for the different units of the bouncil for Private Enterprise. The members where to be elected by their various organisations, but thereafter to have a free vote. A new judicid system was established, the Somoza National Guard and associated security organisations were dissolved and a new patriotic national army created on the basis of Sandinista combatents, howest and patriotic members of the National Guard, the other who had 3. fought for liberation and weshed to join the army, and those who were to do national storice. The next step was the elaboration of an Sleetoral Law, a task which fell to the bouncil of State, deting in consultation with the country's political parties and stimulating national debate. The bouncil sent a mided team to visit different countries in Western Europe and Latin America in order to merrorate into Micaraguan law, element of universal tradition applicable to the the reality of the country. ' The Law was adopted in 1983 and elections for a President, Vice-Presedent and 90 member National Asembly were held in 1984. Finally, the National Assembly has the function of producing a Draft Constitution, which is expected to be adopted in famery 1987, two years after the present gavernment took office.

(4). The above summary indicates the step by step nature of the Constitutional development in the past - liberation society. What the documents themselves vereal is that the Landinistas have managed to fulfil their guarantees of political pluralism, mixed leavany and non-alignment, while at the same time maintaining their leading tole in government, engaging in canter-revolution. The documents take mainly in Spanish and contain many sections, it from to the rights of national minorities - freedom of speech to land reform to the rights of national minorities - it would be advisable to attempt to find translations, summaries or commentaries in English. Hebelly the Although the Nicaraguan experience is not directly relevant to the South aprican experience, it shares a similar context, as fidel bastro pointed out: "The front of struggle for social change has to be a board one, including blivistians, Irtoskyites, workers, the middle class and also the military, don't forget them, or do we want to hand them are to the CIA? (5) The front cannot be extremist. We have to find formulas like the Micardguan one, or other. The Nicaraguan approach is well adjusted to current international revcumstances. It is realistic. With regards to the way it took power, the Micaraguan revolution is very similar to the beban me. But if the Nicarguan revolution had radicalesed itself and proclaimed socialism, I don't think this would have helped the revolutionary movement of bentral america or South America. "The Nicaraguans have made an important contribution to the struggle of other peoples, since, if it had adicalitettettet it would have isolated itself, induced fear, tool is given arguments to imperialism and facilitated the work of Reagen." Cademon de Jerceeio Mundo, August 1985. In the concrete circumstances of the time, It should be noted that the process of negotiations by the landenistes with other political varies (at least six, ranging from ultra-left to renservative) is part of the pluralism Equaranteed. But it never involved regoliations with Lomoza, nor does it involve negoliations with the contrastoday. The two juarantees against pluralism leading to counter-revolution are that popular mobilisation and the fact that the bandenistes control the armed forces; the external quarantee is the support of progressive international forces.