Dear Joe,

Many thanks for your generous response to our suggestion of an exchange of materials. The themes that I mentioned were, of course, a sample and by no means a closed list. We would welcome exchange in all fields. If I may mention your own speciality, your historical approach to commercial law is of special interest here, where the commercial law course is being converted into a course on planning law. Similarly, I would personally welcome materials on International Law, Family Law and Criminal Law/Criminology.

We are particularly grateful for your willingness to send such copies of the East African Law Review as are available. We hope in due course to be able to respond appropriately to this gesture. I have managed to collect quite a number of documents in English, and have translated an important talk myself. The problem now is to organize a suitable format, so that multiple copies can be made in readable form. You will be the first to receive whatever we have.

In the meanwhile, I have prepared an article

on the Constitution of the Peoples Republic of Mozambique which you might like to show to Selena for inclusion in the special southern African edition of the Review. The article is largely descriptive in character, but it has the virtue of being the only one on the subject prepared for an academic journal (as far as I am aware).

My greetings to all colleagues, and to your secretary and all the workers in the Faculty who were so helpful to me during my stay in Dar Es Salaam.

Sincerely,
Albie Sachs.
